

Victor Gomez, Adjunct Professor, Stillman School of Business and Esports Manager, Seton Hall University

Victor Gomez, Adjunct Professor at the Stillman School of Business and Esports Manager at Seton Hall University, has been instrumental to the founding, creation, and growth of the University's esports program.

An accomplished alumnus of Seton Hall, Victor he has been at the forefront of the university's esports endeavors since 2013 – the same year that the United States officially recognized esports players as professional athletes. His expertise in the field has been integral to the program and its continued success. Victor currently also serves as an Adjunct Professor in the Stillman School of Business and on the Electronic Gaming Federation's Collegiate Division (EGFC) Board of Governors leading their impact committee.

In partnership with the University's Department of Information Technology, Victor spearheaded Seton Hall's integration of esports into the strategic mission and the creation of a state-of-the-art esports lab, the base of operations for the University's three teams: Rocket League, League of Legends, and Super Smash Brother's Ultimate. The esports program has already claimed success as the first BIG EAST tournament champion in the 2018 ESL Rocket League Winter Invitational and the 2020 BIG EAST x ESL League of Legends Championship, 2020 Big East x MAAC Rocket League Challenge Champions, and most recently Ranking 5th in the East and top 10 in the nation in Collegiate Rocket League.
