Eamon Holley is a leading telecommunications, technology, and data lawyer in the Middle East, and regularly advises clients in relation to the United Arab Emirates (UAE), Bahrain, Qatar, and Oman. His client base includes both government bodies and private sector entities, whom he advises on contentious and non-contentious issues ranging from traditional telecommunications regulation through to emerging issues for the telecommunications sector, such as machine to machine regulation, VoIP regulation, cloud computing, data protection, cyber-crime, and cyber security.

Mr. Holley's experience includes working with an international airline based in the Middle East in relation to its privacy policies and Inter-Group Data Transfer GDPR compliance; working with a national Ministry of France in the Gulf region to develop a sector-specific data protection law; advising a Middle East working committee, and its successor government department, in relation to the government's proposed strategy for implementing an Open Data regime, including the gathering and processing of certain types of personal information; and regularly advising regional and multinational companies in relation to data protection and privacy compliance within the UAE.

Mr. Holley is listed in Chambers and Partners Global as a ranked TMT lawyer. He is also a listed telecommunications expert for the UAE in the International Who's Who Legal. In 2016, he was ranked by the International Who's Who Legal as one of the fifteen "Most Highly Regarded" telecommunications lawyers in the world, and is noted by the Legal 500 as a "Next Generation Lawyer" within TMT in the UAE.
