Hogan Lovells Cadwalader

A former federal prosecutor, Matthew Sullivan defends corporate and individual clients facing government investigations, enforcement actions, sensitive internal investigations, and complex civil litigation—with a particular focus on life sciences companies.

Matthew has a wealth of experience representing pharmaceutical companies, medical device manufacturers, and universities in federal and state government investigations, internal investigations, and civil False Claims Act litigation, involving promotional practices, pricing, billing, and recalls. He has conducted numerous internal investigations in the life sciences and telecommunications/technology sectors, including on behalf of clients subject to corporate compliance monitorships.

His cross-border investigations experience has spanned six continents. Such investigations include matters implicating the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act and U.S. export control and sanctions laws, involving the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industry and Security (BIS), and the Department of Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC).

Previously, Matthew served as an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Maryland, prosecuting dozens of cases at the investigation, trial, and appellate stages. He led multiple federal wiretap investigations, conducted lengthy grand jury investigations, and prosecuted cases involving fraud, international narcotics conspiracies, and money laundering.
