Natasha Tardif co-heads the firm's Competition and European Law department in Paris. She specializes in issues relating to competition, distribution, and consumer law. She notably assists global leaders in the e-commerce, pharmaceuticals, medical devices producers, chemicals, and retail industries before the French and EU courts and authorities.

Ms. Tardif's areas of expertise include anti-competitive practices, abuse of market power, dawn raids, and compensation of damages in anti-competitive practices (private enforcement). She also has deep experience in merger control matters before the French Competition Authority and the European Commission. She has also developed particular knowledge in the regulatory, unfair trading rules, and consumer protection regulations.

Ms. Tardif regularly advises clients on appeals countering decisions involving sanctions against alleged abuses of dominant position and anti-competitive behavior, as well as on competition-related investigations. Her unique litigation practice involves representation of clients in matters relating to termination of business relations and significant imbalance.

Ms. Tardif regularly publishes articles and books, gives interviews, and is often invited to speak at conferences in Paris, London, Brussels, and the United States. She is also a lecturer in the European Business Law Master's degree course at the Paris V University.

Ms. Tardif has a British and French background, studying law in both the UK and France, and has worked at law firms in New York, Paris, and London. She is a native English and French speaker, and also speaks German and Persian.
