Stephen Lilley, a partner in the Washington DC office of Mayer Brown, helps clients navigate cutting-edge and interrelated litigation, regulatory, and policy challenges. He has significant experience working with clients to identify, evaluate, and manage risks associated with data privacy and security practices. Stephen is regularly called upon to provide privacy and security assessments, conduct thorough audits of client practices and policies, advise on liabilities associated with inadequate programs, and provide training to ensure compliance with the full array of global data protection regulations. Stephen is widely recognized for his cybersecurity law and policy experience. He co-authored the firm's guides on Cybersecurity Regulation and Cyber Incident Response, and served as a member of the Center for Strategic & International Studies Cyber Policy Task Force as it developed cybersecurity recommendations for the administration.

Before joining Mayer Brown, Stephen worked for the US Senate Judiciary Committee as Chief Counsel to the Subcommittee on Crime and Terrorism, where he had a particular focus on cybersecurity. He clerked for Judge Thomas Ambro on the US Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and Judge Jeremy Fogel on the US District Court for the Northern District of California. A summa cum laude graduate of Princeton University, Stephen received his law degree from Yale Law School, where he served as a Senior Editor of the Yale Law Journal.
